

The Best Way To Recycle Your Mobile Phone

Mobile Phone Recycling is a term that's well and truly coined now, more so now that more awareness around it has been raised. The rise of these types of recycling sites, their companies and services and the people that use them to sell and recycle their old mobiles. Yet still it is estimated that we only actually recycle around 5% of the 90 million mobile phones in circulation in the UK.

Things to do with an old mobile phone. If you have an old mobile you will inevitably upgrade it one day to a new model. One that has more features and advancements than the last that your provider gives you with your contract. Or maybe you're a Pay-G user and want to or have purchased a new handset. So what do you do with the old one?

Of course most people only need or want to carry one mobile, you can simply replace the SIM card from your old one into the new one. Naturally your old one will be left over as a spare. And unless you already have a plan for it, it will probably end up tossed aside in a drawer and forgotten about. Or kept as a spare phone for whatever reason. Like the majority of old replaced mobiles and electrical accessories. Before these were luxurious fashion accessories and not a necessity as they are now, there was never a way to sell on or recycle old mobiles as these industries didn't yet exist. But over time as they have become more mainstream, they have always been upgraded and replaced. There has been cause for people to want to do something with the old mobiles they have or may have collected over time.

So the first thing to think of is selling your old mobile phones. There have always been classified ads opportunities and on line auction sites such as eBay to list and sell your old mobile to. Or by selling them to people such as friends or family members for cash or favors. If you have a golden soul about you, you can donate them to Charity. There are many such recycling initiatives running probably with your local charity shop or social club that you can do this with. Another viable option to think about that's available to do now is to recycle your mobile. You can recycle old or even broken mobiles for cash. This is proving to be beneficial to many people who never knew this and do it. There are incentives offered and benefits to recycling your old mobile phone this way. It's a simple free process that doesn't take much time. And you are doing your part to help the Environment as well. Recycling mobile phones reduces landfill waste where they can have a damaging effect on the Environment. Precious metals from inside such as on the circuit boards like Gold & Silver can be extracted and used again saving having to mine more for these resources where we are destroying delicate ecological wildlife systems.

So mobile recycling should help you clean up and clear out your old things. You'll get cash for it and help the Environment at the same time. Sell your mobile to a mobile phone recycling site. But see reviews and cross comparisons of the top ones and compare the prices using a special price comparison tool first to ensure you make the right choice for you and get the most money for your mobile.
