

Carpet Cleaning Eastern MA: Carpet Cleaning 101

Carpets can cost a lot of money, and with that investment, you will want to make it last as long as possible. One of the best ways to make your carpeting last is by vacuuming it regularly and having it cleaned on a schedule. While there are home carpet cleaners that do an adequate job, getting the services of a professional carpet cleaner from time to time is what makes all the difference.

With your home carpet cleaner, you'll want to make sure that it heats your water up to at least 118 degrees Fahrenheit or higher. For every 18 degrees you add on, the chemical reactivity of the cleaning solution is changed. So, when using a hot water extraction method, it is generally done between 150 to 200 degrees. Hot water extraction cleaning is superior to dry cleaning. In other words, heat is the key to getting the best results.

Three things come into play when you use heat or steam to clean your carpet: heat, agitation and dwell time. Dwell time is the amount of time you let the cleaning solution sit on the carpet. If you don't have the highest heat, you want to increase the dwell time.

Rinse out the cleaning solution thoroughly because the detergent attracts dirt. You need to rinse it thoroughly each time the water gets dirty in order not to put dirt back into your carpeting. Renting a cleaning machine is one way to go about keeping your carpets cleaner between professional cleanings. Go for the wet machines and check the maximum heat. The hotter the unit, the better the cleaning solution will work. Steam units are even better because they generate even more heat to get the solution working even better.

When it gets to the point where the home unit isn't working well enough, it's time to call in the professional for carpet cleaning MA. They employ a wider variety of cleaning methods including rotary bonnet and shampooing, dry foam and hot water extraction methods, as well as dry absorbent compounds. They use these alone or in combination to give your rugs the best cleaning possible, and their heat generation methods give maximum levels for the best fiber cleaning possible.

Professionals also know which methods to use on which types of carpeting and can work miracles in stain removal. Having a clean, fresh carpet without stains goes a long way towards lengthening the life of the carpet and keeping the house fresh and clean. Using professional services can be offset by home cleaning units and vacuuming on a regular basis in order to give the carpeting a long life. It extends the life of your pricey investment to the maximum so that your carpeting will last for years without replacement.
