Camping is interesting to get away for a few days into the countryside under canvas. There is nothing to beat having fresh air and eating outdoors, surrounded by nice scenery. Of course, possessing the right camping supplies and equipment makes the experience all the more enjoyable.

The basics needs to be the right one. Tents differ in price and size, from the simple one-man variety to enormous family tents. It is imperative to opt for one that fits the terrain and climate of the destination. Some tents are only made for warm weather and any winter camping will necessitate a 4-season tent. A lot of persons like to buy some kind of air mattress to sleep on. It cushions against the earth and provides insulation too. These come in single, double and king size with pillows and pumps that can be charged up from a car battery.

A good sleeping bag will ensure a sound night's sleep. Again, there is a choice of materials aimed at different weather conditions. Children may have their own junior size models. A lantern or flashlight with spare batteries is a good item to put on the camping supplies list. Protected dining areas provide extra space and make camping more comfy. Plastic table and chair sets can be cleaned easily and will last for years. There are portable stoves, Dutch ovens and barbecues, kettles and sets of durable pans and dishes. Food, wine and beer can be kept cool in mini refrigerators or cool boxes.

For those who want to take a break from cooking, camping supplies can consist of pre-prepared meals that just need added water. There is a good variety that includes curries, chilies, meatballs and pasta and some delicious puddings. Screens will provide protection from interested insects and windbreaks will give shelter from the elements. The most efficient way to transport water from the campsite's water supply is by using water carriers.

When living outdoors, laundry is another thing to consider. Mini washing machines and dryers will keep the family in clean clothes. Camping equipment must also include a clothes line or airer that could be attached to the tent. Remember to bring the pegs. Campers might want the use of a heater on chilly nights. There are many models to choose from and they have security features to make sure that they don't overheat and the thermostat cuts out if knocked over. Toilet facilities are the more boring aspects of camping supplies but a necessary concern. There is a wide variety of portable and chemical toilets in specialized stores.
